Our children are learning about the internet, email and text messaging at younger and younger ages. While technology can open up exciting learning opportunities, parents need to be aware of the dangers that exist for their children. From harassing text messages to threats via email, electronic communication has taken adolescent teasing beyond the school grounds and daytime hours to a whole new level of cruelty. While the harassment may start online, it can escalate to physical violence and very real emotional distress. Come for an informative presentation and question/answer session on how to address this issue with high school teenagers.

Please join The Anti-Defamation League (ADL) Plains States Region for an overview session of our nationally recognized initiative designed to help parents and families prevent and stop online harassment and ensure a culture of safety and respect for all children.
